Operation Breaking Stereotypes
Lewiston High School and Maranacook Community High School
Meet-up! Feb. 8-9, 2018

OBS is a group of people in Maine headed by Connie Carter who helps students from different cultures connect with each other in the attempt to break down stereotypes created by ignorance. Connie currently is working with MCHS and Lewiston high school. Twelve of our students from various demographic and ethnic backgrounds have been partnered up with twelve students from LHS. The students from Lewiston have grown up in places like Sudan, Somalia, South Africa, London, Miami Beach, Philippines, and Kenya. This grouping has provided MCHS students with an invaluable opportunity to connect with students who have a very different cultural identity than their own. Our students who are now mostly juniors have been partnered up with their counterpart for almost three years total. They constantly keep in touch with their partner through social media, and meet up usually four to five times a year. They work together to create presentations that educate people about cultural identity.
